Nine Massage Places Ordered to Shut Their Doors.

A RESULT OF COMPLAINTS

The Number of Such Establishment Was Rapidly Increasing-Sought Washington After Having Been Driven Out of Other Cities-All Sub mitted Quietly to the Order.

The reform movement that began Bat urday with the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the "Division" has been extended to the women throughout the First precinct, who maintain estab-ishments for the alleged purpose of giving massage, vapor and electric baths. All the women advertising such a business have been notified by the police to shut up shop or submit to a raid, with a police court denouement, and all, with more or less good grace, accepted the inevitable, and prepared to move. Today it is impossible to get even a legitimate massage bath, for the order did not discriminate. Good and lad alike were told to quit. Within the past few months places of this description have become rather numerous, and their numbers seemed to be continually increasing. Most of them came from New York, Philadelphia or Boston, and some from Chicago or other Western cities. COMPLAINTS POURED IN.

They settled in the central part of the city, advertised their "baths" and start-ed in to do a rushing business. Soon, how-ever, complaints began to be received at ceer complaints began to be received at headquarters, becoming more frequent as no attention was paid to them. Finally Major Moore had a consulta-tion with the Commissioners, and then with Lieut. Amiss of the First precinct, where most of the places were situated. The major decided that it would not be

In Boston, too, they were broken up pretty generally, and the Western cities have adopted va-rious methods to keep them within bounds. THE ORDER GIVEN OUT.

The order of Major Moore was placed in the bands of Sergt, Schilling yesterday afternoon, and, accompanied by a couple of patrolmen, made the rourd of the band establishments. All of the "madames" were notified that they must close up at nce and take no more customers after the isit of the policemen. The order was read to them in order that there might be no misinderstanding, and, regretfully and some times tearfully they promised to comply. There are probably two or three legifinate operators among the ones who were visited by the police, and a few who gave the massage baths in connection with manicure or chiropody. The latter were told that they could continue to pare and trim the hands and feet of patrons, but they must refrain from bathing them.

"To the Western Union Telegraph Company, February 12, 1893, in accordance with public resolution, No. 13, approved February 15, 1893, to extend insulated overhead wires from their inc on Seventh street into the Pension building. These wires have since been removed.

"To the superimendent of the District."

"To the superintendent of the District Telegraph and Telephone service, of the District. February 12, 1894, to erect overhead wires on Four-and-a-half street southwest, to replace a defective cable, the same being necessary for the public safety. This permit was approved by the attorney of the District, and a full history of the transaction is given in the Commissioners' report of March 1, 1894, n answer to Senate resolution.

"To the architect of the Capitol, February 19, 1894, for the United States government to creet poles and string a tele-phone wire from the house near the Capitol to the folding room, located in square 635, the same being represented to the Commisioners as absolutely necessary for the public service.

NOT PROHIBITED.

The Commissioners say, by way of comment, that "neither the act approved July 15, 1888, nor any subsequent acts of Contress, promisited the erection of overhead wires in the alleys in the city of Washington, nor the erection of overhead wires in any part of the District outside of the city. "Under the general police powers conferred upon them by Congress, the Commissioners have granted permits to the missioners have granted permits to the following corporations, doing business in the District, to string overhead wires in alleys, or in the District outside of the city, as they were advised by their at-torncy they had the right to do." The companies are:
"The United States Electric Lighting

Company, Chesapeake and Potomac Tele-phone Company, Western Union Telegraph Company, the Postal Telegraph Company, the Potomac Light and Power Company, Company, Washington and Arlington Power Company, and J. Harris Rogers.

"It would take considerable time," they add, "to make a transcript of all such permits granted since September 15, 1888, out it can be done if deemed advisable The appropriation act, approved August 7, 1894, is quoted, which empowered the commissioners to authorize the erection and use of poles in the public alleys, with the proviso that the right be reserved o the District to use the poles for stringing wires for fire alarm and police purpo

"Under this authority," the Commis-sioners cite, "permits have been granted the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company

THE POTOMAC COMPANY. "Under the act of March 3, 1891, which states that the prohibition to the extension of conduits is not to apply to necessary street and house connections for electric service, nor change of motive power on street railroads in compliance with exist-ing law, permit was granted to the Po-tomac Light and Power Company, on No-vember 26, 1895, to make a house connec-tion to No. 3305 M street northwest.

This connection has not been made. "Since March 3, 1891, the Commissioners have issued permits for conduits for elec-tric wires, which were not an addition to nor extension of a previously existing con-duit, or subway, established under previously existing law."

They are as follows:

"The Commissioners, having agreed to enter into a contract with the Potomac Light and Power Company to light the Acqueduct Bridge, permit was given that company on November 26, 1895, to lay an company on November 26, 1893, to my an underground conduit across M street northwest, for the purpose of connecting its existing lines with the Acqueduct Bridge. This conduit has not been constructed.

lington and Falls Church Railroad, successors to the Washington and Arlington Railway, to construct a conduit a street, so as to replace two wires, which had been formerly strung across the street." This concludes the report. Copies of the opinions of Attorney Thomas, referred to, and copies of the permits specially des-ignated, were forwarded as accompanying exhibits.
